Cyberlens

with John Woods & Jim Lyon
Of Eastman Kodak Company

Cyberlens is a presentation of intermediate and advanced tutorials in Adobe Photoshop. The aim is to provide photographers with Photoshop tools that will be extensions of the traditional photographic techniques, which they may already employ. Included are tools that are very much like those used in a conventional darkroom or during a shooting session.

Each participant will receive a CD-ROM containing all of the tutorials that will be presented, plus quite a few additional examples.

The program is at the Best Buy Headquarters, Bloomington, MN - 7601 Penn Ave. S, Richfield, MN.

Sponsored by Iowa City CC

N4C President's Message

At the September Convention a question came up: Would we consider changing the rules for the Photo Travel division? That three times a year the entries would have to be taken in the ten-state N4C area only. Slides shot elsewhere could not be entered at these times.

After a discussion the Board decided: Why not give it a try. As word spread later, people who were not at the meeting questioned the need for such a change.

How will the judging club know if the shot was taken in the ten-state area? The answer to that is — there is a rule in place now. The last line of the definition of Photo Travel states: "Be sure to state the name of the locale where the picture was made on the slide." Also, the last line of Rules for All Categories of 2x2 Slides, for Photo Travel: "The location of the photograph must be included." The judging club will need to enforce that rule.

Another person remarked, "Great, now we won't have to compete with those Teton barns, bison in Yellowstone snow, and the Glacier Nat'l Park mountains." Well, the last time I checked, Wyoming and Montana were still in N4C land - sorry.

Another asked, "A month after a club has judged, they can put in double entries. Will that club be limited to the N4C region or could they enter half and half?" "Half from the N4C area and the other half from elsewhere?"

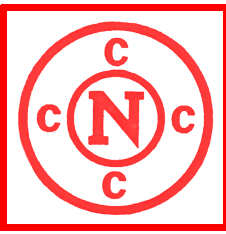

Another Board member and I watched the monthly winners on Friday night at the Convention. We noticed that a number of slides in the "Best of Show" for Photo Travel were from the N4C region. So they already are winning. At last year's year end, two out of the six were year-end winners, a 3rd place and an HM.

In January my club judged Photo Travel. 61 slides were entered: 28 were shot in other states, 14 from N4C states, 12 from locations in other countries, and 7 were unidentified locations. Two of the six winners were from N4C states.

Some people are asking, "Do we need to change the rules?" How do you feel? This will be discussed more at the Springbrook meeting. I need to hear from you! What are your thoughts? How do you want it done? Call me, write, send an e-mail (Do not send an attachment, my computer will not pull it up).

Make plans to attend Springbrook. We need to decide on this rule before the fall convention.

N4C Photo Essay Contest

Get those ideas flowing and get your entries ready -- they are due April 15. Remember that this year digital entries on CD are eligible, as well as the good ole traditional slide trays, too. Let's see some of both this spring. I've added some information about digital entries and software to our N4C photo essay website:

www.lovetatting.com/n4cphotoessay/n4cindex.htm
(link from there to the Digital Entry Information page)

In addition to the information on the website, do also check your Handbook for the contest rules. The judging club this year is Fargo-Moorhead. Page K-9 of the newest Handbook gives you the address to which to send your entries. Good luck to all entrants!! We'll look forward to seeing your work.

Outside judges were used to judge. Some very nice black and white prints that really had all black and white tones. Others were just plain gray all over. There were some ties which were broken by discussion and the scores were not changed.

Clubs and makers really have to start labeling prints on back as to what class and their club name. Also, anyclub competition labels should be blocked out. Some prints were labeled with their club's competition category and then entered in N4C in a different category on the entry form.

Some really great nature prints, but most were average quality. One really stood out. Some computer printed prints had computer printing lines in the image—would have gotten a better score without the lines.

Ties were broken by discussion and the scores were not changed. Again, prints need to be properly labeled as to class.

Also, there is no separate category for black and white nature prints. Color and black and white nature prints are judged as one group.

Film: It's Alive!!!

9 reasons film won't die

All of the excitement, new products, and creative potential that are part of the digital revolution are enough to make filmshooters paranoid. Add to this Kodak's last-September announcement that the photographic giant would, as one headline from The Wall Street Journal put it, "Shift Focus Away From Film, Toward Digital Lines." As a lover of things silver halide, you might be tempted to break out black armbands (yes, with sprocket holes on the edges).

But film isn't going away. Overshadowed? Yes. Extinct or even endangered? Hardly. There are millions of high-end film cameras out there, and millions of serious film shooters. While some of this may be nostalgia, most of film's continuing appeal is practical. Film still does a lot well.

With the help of the POP PHOTO Tech Team, here's a look at just some of the reasons we know film has a future:

Film Cameras Are A Steal. Got $300? You can buy a lot more film SLR than digital anything... Soon you may want to buy a digital SLR body to use with your existing lenses, but in the meantime, a digital SLR is far more expensive than its 35mm counterpart.

Film Is Fast. Low light? For high image quality you can't beat film. ISO 800 color-print film can give you quite acceptable resolution, sharpness, and even grain... With most digital cameras, digital noise can degrade your images to the point of "why bother?" at ISO setting above 400.

Film Can Be Enlarged...A Lot. Big prints? Think film. Load ISO 100 print film into any decent SLR, and chances are you'll get negatives that can be blown up to 20x24 prints that are sharp and detailed.

For a digital camera to match that, you'd have to spend five times as much.

Film Is Power-Stingy. When was the last time you changed the batteries in your 35mm SLR? I can't remember, either. That's especially true when your film camera packs lithium cells. Digitals, on the other hand, need regular recharging or constant reinforcements. Not a problem if juice is readily available, but if you're out of batteries in a remote spot, you're out of photography...

Film Doesn't Crash. As someone who's watched his hard drive write its own obituary with a couple hundred of my family photos, believe me when I say there's a sense of, well, permanence, in envelopes full of negatives or a stack of sleeves loaded with slides.

Film Doesn't Require Infrastructure. With digital, after your first few hundred shots, you must get some sort of a system. Typically, that includes album software for our computer, CD backups, and online storage at an outfit... It's great, but far more time-consuming than envelopes and sleeves.

Film Is The Original Photoshop. Infrared, in-camera multiple exposures, reflection-free polarized shots...they're all part of the film camera gene pool...

Film Is RAW. ...With film, all of the "data" is on the negative or slide, and can be accessed with proper printing techniques or on a pro-caliber film scanner.

Film Doesn't Preclude Digital. Once you scan a slide, negative, or print into a computer, it's a digital image. From there on, the capture medium doesn't matter. And all of the enhancing/manipulating and printing gee-whiz that the digital darkroom allows is yours. But you know this: you're doing it now.
