EXAMPLES OF PAST PROGRAMS AWARDED

Dreams For Youth: A program of the San Antonio Sports Foundation encompassing six Olympic Sports, DFY targets disadvantaged youth to expose them to the sport of fencing and promote self-esteem and personal growth. There are currently eight DFY fencing programs in San Antonio, located in local fencing clubs, YMCAs and housing projects.

Boston Fencing Club: BFC works with City Year, a national service organization connected to Americorps, and collegiate fencers from Boston College, MIT, and Tufts to provide after school programs for middle school programs. The college teams provide volunteer instruction, thus the program not only develops young fencers, but provides opportunities for college students to grow and develop as instructors. Everyone wins!

Sister's Academy: This school in Asbury Park, New Jersey is financed totally through grants and donations. Operated by the Sisters of Mercy and open only to underprivileged children, the school's mission is to educate girls in the fifth through eighth grades. All fifth grade girls are required to participate in the fencing program and may choose to participate in later years as members of the USFA.

Lincoln Fencing Club: The Lincoln Fencing Club is located in T-town, the poorest part of Lincoln with the highest crime rate. Kit Boesch, the Head Coach, writes, "Single parent families; low to no income; referrals from the criminal justice system: Fencing has become family for these kids. When they attend a tournament it is the only chance they have ever had to leave Lincoln. There's no guarantee these kids will make the Olympics, but some of these kids could do quite well, maybe get into college."
